1. Background Information

In September, 2013, the Swedish Migration Board made a new assessment of the conflict in Syria; based on this, the norm for issuing residence permits to asylum applicants from Syria (including stateless persons from Syria) is now to grant a permanent residence permit, irrespective of whether an applicant is found to be a refugee in accordance with the Geneva Convention, or a person in need of subsidiary protection. (Before the new assessment, approximately half of all asylum seekers from Syria were granted permanent residence permits and another half was granted temporary residence permits with a validity period of three years.) Since the new assessment was made, the number of applicants from Syria (including stateless persons) has increased considerably.

The Migration Board continuously evaluates and monitors the impact and consequences of its decision-making. A very important component of this is to also study decision-making and practices regarding the granting of residence permits, as well as processing times for asylum applications, in other European countries.

To better understand decision-making regarding applicants from Syria (and stateless persons) and, in particular, the consequences of the decisions taken in terms of the temporary or permanent nature of residence permits issued, as well as any recent changes of such practices, we would like to ask you to answer two questions and to provide statistical data for three different periods of time (1 January-31 December 2012; 1 January-30 June 2013; and 1-31 October 2013), in accordance with the Tables below:

1. If your country issues temporary residence permits to Syrian nationals that are found to be refugees/persons otherwise in need of protection, how long is the validity period of these permits and under what conditions can they be renewed/extended?
2. For all persons that, in the framework of an asylum procedure, are found to be refugees/persons otherwise in need of protection, what is the respective share of permanent and temporary residence permits issued to these persons? (This question refers to asylum seekers from all countries, first instance decisions. Please use annual data for 2012.)

|  | Belgium | Yes | 1. Although most Syrian asylum seekers obtain a positive decision (Geneva Convention or subsidiary protection), they do not benefit special treatment in Belgium. The general procedures regarding their application for international protection and their residence status apply equally to Syrian nationals as to nationals of other countries. Recognition as a refugee involves the right to permanent residence on the Belgian territory. The residence permit takes the form of an electronic card B, proving official registration in the Immigrants Registry. As mentioned, this residence permit is valid for an undetermined and unlimited period. The electronic card B itself is valid for five years and needs to be renewed between the 45th and 30th day before date of expiry, but no conditions need to be fulfilled to do so. In case subsidiary protection is granted to a Syrian national (or other), first a temporary residence permit will be released being valid for a duration of one year, in the form of an electronic card A. Between the 45th and 30th day before date of expiry the protected person needs to address the Immigrants Office to request renewal of his residence permit. In case the Immigrants Office considers that conditions to be granted subsidiary protection are still fulfilled, it will order release of a new residence permit, valid for a duration of two years, in the form of an electronic card A. Under the same conditions, this permit can be renewed for another two years. However, after a period of five years starting from the date of application for international protection, the protected person who's status hasn't been withdrawn at any time during these five years, will be granted a permanent residence permit in the form of an electronic card B (supra). 2. See above: refugee status leads to a permanent residence permit; subsidiary protection leads to a temporary residence permit (renewable). In Belgium a humanitarian status can not be granted as the outcome of an asylum application. There is a specific procedure to obtain a residence permit on humanitarian or medical grounds. A significant percentage of persons who apply for a status on humanitarian or medical grounds, concern rejected asylum seekers. <table border="1" data-bbox="577 1342 1429 1423"> <tr> <td>DECISION/TIME</td> <td>2012</td> </tr> <tr> <td>Total number of decisions</td> <td>24.640</td> </tr> </table> | DECISION/TIME | 2012 | Total number of decisions | 24.640 | status, a further 5 795 applicants were granted subsidiary protection.

 According to the German Residence Act, persons granted subsidiary protection receive a residence permit with a validity period of one year which can be extended by a further two years. After 3 years a permanent settlement permit shall be issued to the foreigner if the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees has provided notification in accordance with the Asylum Procedure Act that the conditions for revocation or withdrawal do not apply.

|  | Italy | Yes | 1. In Italy, each asylum application is evaluated on a case by case basis, and the duration and possibility of renewal of temporary permits granted to refugees and persons otherwise in need of protection is established by law. The temporary residence permit granted to persons in need of protection has a duration of 3 years. The permit is renewable after it has been verified that the conditions necessary to obtain the relevant protection status persist. 2. According to 2012 Eurostat data available for Italy, in 8% of first instance decisions, refugee status was granted and permanent permits were issued. Moreover, 73% of first instance decisions recognized the status of persons otherwise in need of protection and temporary residence permits were issued. The elevated share of permits issued was a direct result of the extraordinary situation in Tunis and of the subsequent wave of landings of Tunisian citizens to whom humanitarian protection was granted by Italy. 3. |  | Latvia | Yes | 1. According to the Asylum Law each case is considered on its individual merits regarding refugee status and (if there are no grounds for granting refugee status) afterwards – regarding subsidiary protection. Starting from 2011 all Syrian asylum seekers are granted subsidiary protection (Art 15C) and temporary residence permits (for 1 year and each year permit should be prolonged. If temporary residence permit is prolonged 5 times, person can apply and receive permanent residence permit). There were no significant changes in number of Syrian asylum claims in LV: 2011-16, 2012-18 and 2013-15. 2. We are not in the position to provide detailed statistical data by quarters however we can inform that the total number of first asylum applications in 2012 was 189: approx.16% received positive decision - 5 % were granted refugee status and permanent residence permit as well as 11% were granted subsidiary protection and temporary residence permits [Subsidiary protection was granted and temporary residence permits were issued in 100% to asylum seekers from Syria. In all Syrian cases positive decisions were taken by the first instance]. | | | | | | | | |

|  | Slovak Republic | Yes | 1. Based on the Act on Asylum, are the persons with granted asylum and person with granted subsidiary protection entitled to reside on the territory of the Slovak Republic automatically without the prior need to assess their application for residence and fulfilment the related legal conditions. The person with granted asylum is based on the law considered a person with permanent residence. The subsidiary protection is in the SR granted for 1 year. The person with granted subsidiary protection is based on the law considered a person with temporary residence. These provisions are applicable to all regardless of their country of origin including those who are stateless. What concerns the applicants for international protection from Syria, those who in the reference period applied for international protection in the SR mostly left the country before the first instance decision on their application was taken, so the proceeding was stopped. In the reference period all together 21 applications from Syria were filed, 1 asylum and 3 subsidiary protection statuses were granted. 9 cases are not decided yet and the remaining were stopped as the applicants left the country. 2. As stated in answer to question 1 the person with granted asylum is based on the law considered a person with permanent residence and the person with granted subsidiary protection is based on the law considered a person with temporary residence. Thus the share is the same as the share between granted asylum and subsidiary protection statuses. See the table below. | | | | | | | | |

|  | United Kingdom | Yes | 1. The United Kingdom does not issue temporary residence permits to Syrian nationals. Where Syrian nationals are found to be refugees, or in need of humanitarian protection, they are granted Leave to Remain for five years; they can apply for further leave after four years. In October 2012, the Government announced a concession for Syrian nationals admitted to the UK on a temporary visa, and who do not wish to apply for international protection. The concession provides the option of extending their stay, without having to apply for | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | asylum/protection.

2. For all persons that, in the framework of an asylum procedure, are found to be refugees/persons otherwise in need of protection, what is the respective share of permanent and temporary residence permits issued to these persons? (This question refers to asylum seekers from all countries, first instance decisions. Please use annual data for 2012. The United Kingdom does not issue temporary or permanent residence permits to persons found to be refugees/persons otherwise in need of protection.

| | | | TO NOTE: These figures are published from latest National Statistics published in the release ‘Immigration Statistics, July – September 2013’, available from https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/immigration-statistics-july-to-september-2013. Figures for asylum applications and their outcomes are for main applicants and exclude reapplications. Figures that appear in the column ‘First instance decisions allowing for temporary residence’ include grants of asylum, humanitarian protection, discretionary leave, leave to remain under family life or private life rules, leave outside the rules and UASC leave. These are granted in line with the comments above – ‘The United Kingdom does not issue temporary residence permits to Syrian nationals. Where Syrian nationals are found to be refugees, or in need of humanitarian protection, they are granted Leave to Remain for five years; they can apply for further leave after four years.’ | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | |
|  | Norway | Yes | 1. In Norway, everyone who is given protection is issued a permit which lasts for 3 years. This will normally lead to permanent residence after 3 years. There is normally no further case analysis at this point in time. Applicants will have to wait a longer period of time to get permanent residence if they have committed a crime. Applicants who are formally excluded from being considered for refugee status are the exception to the 3 year protection rule and are only granted a temporary permit. 2. No one is issued a temporary permit in Norway, unless they are formally excluded from consideration for refugee status, in which case, they ARE issued a temporary permit. The first 3 year permit actually entitles an applicant to a permanent residence permit at the end of the 3 year period. In this respect, Norway does not practice issuing temporary permits in these cases. 3.
