CJEU ruling on the right to basic income for long term residents in Italy (joint cases C-112/22 and 223/22)

On 29 July, the CJEU determined that Council Directive 2003/109/EC (the 'Long-Term Residents Directive') precludes legislations of a Member State which subjects the access to a social security, social assistance or social protection measure to the requirement – which also applies to nationals of the Member States – of having resided in the territory of the Member State for at least 10 years, of which the last 2 are consecutive. The Court found such residence requirement to be indirectly discriminating EU long-term residents as compared to the nationals of the Member State since for the former it may be more difficult to meet the residence requirement laid down by the national legislation. The joint cases concerned access by EU long-term residents to the state-provided 'citizenship income' discontinued with effect from 01 January 2024.
