

EMN LITHUANIA CONFERENCE

Towards Coherent Labour Migration: Linking Labour Migration Policy and Integration Efforts

CONCEPT NOTE & AGENDA

27 November 2025

1. RATIONALE AND AIMS

Labour migration remains a core component of EU migration policy, shaped by both enduring priorities and evolving labour market needs. While labour migration and integration policies vary across Member States – reflecting different legal frameworks, institutional arrangements, and labour market conditions – shared challenges emphasize the importance of mutual learning, exchanging best practices, and identifying common principles to develop effective and sustainable labour migration policies. As EU-level strategies and national reforms evolve, there is growing emphasis on developing labour migration and integration policies that are coherent, well-coordinated, and mutually reinforcing.

Recent findings from the European Migration Network's Asylum and Migration Overview (AMO) illustrate how this shift is taking shape across the EU. Member States are refining their legal migration frameworks to better match labour market needs, while also ensuring effective and responsible migration management. These developments are accompanied by more structured integration policies, with increased emphasis on supporting migrants through language learning, civic engagement, and skills development.¹ Together, these trends underscore the recognition that sustainable migration requires both comprehensive governance frameworks and the effective implementation of targeted measures that support migrants' integration and long-term contribution.

The 2025 EMN Lithuania National Conference offers a timely opportunity to explore how labour migration policies and integration efforts can be better aligned to meet evolving workforce demands. The conference will examine how countries can respond to labour market needs while ensuring fair treatment, inclusion, and long-term outcomes for migrants, with a particular focus on third-country nationals (TCNs). Discussions will cover how admission mechanisms, employer responsibilities, and integration measures – such as language learning and skills recognition – can work together to create transparent and balanced migration models. With insights from migration experts and stakeholders across Europe, the event will foster meaningful dialogue on building coherent, effective labour migration systems that benefit both migrants and host societies.

2. PRACTICAL INFORMATION

The Conference is organised by the European Migration Network in Lithuania (EMN Lithuania) in close cooperation with the Ministry of the Interior of Lithuania. EMN in Lithuania is represented by International Organization for Migration (IOM Lithuania) Vilnius office. The event will take place in Vilnius, Lithuania on 27 November 2025. The event will gather National Contact Points from EMN Member and Observer Countries, national network members, migration experts from Lithuania and across Europe, NGOs, international organisations, and other stakeholders.
